Android Apps

It is the process by which new applications are created for devices running the Android operating system. Applications are usually developed in Java (and/or Kotlin; or other such option) programming language using the Android software development kit (SDK), but other development environments are also available, some such as Kotlin support the exact same Android APIs (and bytecode), while others such as Go have restricted API access.

The Android software development kit includes a comprehensive set of development tools. These include a debugger, libraries, a handset emulator based on QEMU, documentation, sample code, and zutorials. Currently supported development platforms include computers running Linux (any modern desktop Linux distribution), Mac OS X 10.5.8 or later, and Windows 7 or later. As of March 2015, the SDK is not available on Android itself, but softwaredevelopment is possible by using specialized Android applications.

Web Application

It is a client–server computer program in which the client (including the user interface and client- side logic) runs in a web browser. Common web applications include web mail, online retail sales, online auctions, wikis, instant messaging services and many other functions. web applications use web documents written in a standard format such as HTML and JavaScript,which are supported by a variety of web browsers. Web applications can be considered as a specifific variant of client–server software where the client software is downloaded to the client machine when visiting the relevant web page, using standard procedures such as HTTP. The Client web software updates may happen each time the web page is visited. During the session, the web browser interprets and displays the pages, and acts as the universal client for any web application. The use of web application frameworks can often reduce the number of errors in a program, both by making the code simpler, and by allowing one team to concentrate on the framework while another focuses on a specifified use case. In applications which are exposed to constant hacking attempts on the Internet, security-related problems can be caused by errors in the program.

Frameworks can also promote the use of best practices such as GET after POST. There are some who view a web application as a two-tier architecture. This can be a “smart” client that performs all the work and queries a “dumb” server, or a “dumb” client that relies on a “smart” server. The client would handle the presentation tier, the server would have the database (storage tier), and the business logic (application tier) would be on one of them or on both. While this increases the scalability of the applications and separates the display and the database, it still doesn‟t allow for true specialization of layers, so most applications will outgrow this model. An emerging strategy for application software companies is to provide web access to software previously distributed as local applications. Depending on the type of application, it may require the development of an entirely different browser-based interface, or merely adapting an existing application to use different presentation technology. These programs allow the user to pay a monthly or yearly fee for use of a software application without having to install it on a local hard drive. A company which follows this strategy is known as an application service provider (ASP), and ASPs are currently receiving much attention in the software industry.

Security breaches on these kinds of applications are a major concern because it can involve both enterprise information and private customer data. Protecting these assets is an important part of any web application and there are some key operational areas that must be included in the development process. This includes processes for authentication, authorization, asset handling, input, and logging and auditing. Building security into the applications from the beginning can be more effective and less disruptive in the long run.

Web design

It is encompasses many different skills and disciplines in the production and maintenance of websites. The different areas of web design include web graphic design; interface design; authoring, including standardized code and proprietary software; user experience design; and search engine optimization. The term web design is normally used to describe the design process relating to the front-end (client side) design of a website including writing mark up. Web design partially overlaps web engineering in the broader scope of web development. Web designers are expected to have an awareness of usability and if their role involves creating mark up then they are also expected to be up to date with web accessibility guidelines. Web design partially overlaps web engineering in the broader scope of web development.

CHAPTER 3

INTRODUCTION

3. INTRODUCTION

Introduction to Web Apps

Web applications are similar to the traditional applications you'd install on your Information, such as Microsoft Office. They are able to perform the same kinds of tasks, they look the same and they feel the same but there is one key difference - the application itself is not installed on your phone or Information, but lives in the cloud. Web apps are not new, but it used to be that they were often unable to compete with more traditional applications for business critical functions or where rich user interaction was required. This is no longer the case. With the power of modern web technologies, we are able to design and build performing, secure, and feature rich applications that live in the cloud and bring with them a huge number of benefits.

1. They can be accessed from anywhere.

- Because web applications are built with web technologies and they run in a web browser Internet Explorer, Google Chrome, Mozilla Firefox – this allows them to be accessed from every web enabled tool. As long as you have an internet connection you can use them.
- It allows for remote working, it allows for rapid publishing of content, it allows for real time collaboration between teams. If you have web access, you have the ability to access your business tools.

2. They are cost effective.

- Web applications are cheaper to produce and maintain than traditional applications. No matter how many platforms your business uses (Mac, Linux, Windows) web application build can be used across them all.

3. They benefit from more rapid update cycles.

- A huge benefit of web applications is that when an update is released, all of your users are immediately using that version. This doesn't happen with installed applications, especially in large organizations with IT policies that restrict administrator access.

4. They are secure.

- Web developers have had to become experts in security – the web is a platform designed to share everything with everyone! As such, the types and levels of security included in web applications are often far greater than those seen in traditional applications.

- They also benefit from the ability to launch updates in real-time – the application on the servers is the application people are using. The applications on people's laptops however is the version last installed. And when those laptops get left on a train it's not a concern, as nothing is stored locally.

5. They enable more computing with fewer Information.

- Web applications push all of the hard work to the servers, and act as intermediaries between the user interface and the calculations happening behind the scenes. This means you can accomplish terrifyingly complex work on a tablet, or your phone.
- We've built web applications that allow people to understand the complex relationships between 250,000 pieces of art on their phones, and applications that run the business systems of one of the largest solar energy providers in the world. Often these products are not financially viable to build using traditional application processes.

Problem Statement

Develop an application which facilitates creation of web pages having a need to install any HTML editor based software and also which can be used by any novice user (no HTML knowledge needed) that is developing web pages on the online. This module is designed to reduce the process involved in managing the activity of customers and business where the business can sell their services and the customers can buy those.

7. IMPLEMENTATION

Implementation is the stage where the theoretical design is turned into a working system. The most crucial stage in achieving a new successful system and in giving confidence on the new system for the users that it will work efficiently and effectively.

The system can be implemented only after thorough testing is done and if it is found to work according to the specification. It involves careful planning, investigation of the current system and it constraints on implementation, design of methods to achieve the change over and an evaluation of change over methods a part from planning.

Two major tasks of preparing the implementation are education and training of the users and testing of the system. The more complex the system being implemented, the more involved will be the system analysis and design effort required just for implementation.

The implementation phase comprises of several activities. The required hardware and software acquisition is carried out. The system may require some software to be developed. For this, programs are written and tested. The user then changes over to his new fully tested system and the old system is discontinued.

TESTING

The testing phase is an important part of software development. It is the Information zed system will help in automate process of finding errors and missing operations and also a complete verification to determine whether the objectives are met and the user requirements are satisfied. Software testing is carried out in three steps:

1. The first includes unit testing, where in each module is tested to provide its correctness, validity and also determine any missing operations and to verify whether theobjectives have been met. Errors are noted down and corrected immediately.
2. Unit testing is the important and major part of the project. So errors are rectified easily in particular module and program clarity is increased. In this project entire system is divided into several modules and is developed individually. So unit testing is conducted to individual modules.
3. The second step includes Integration testing. It need not be the case, the software whose modules when run individually and showing perfect results, will also show perfect results when run as a whole.

CONCLUTION

9. CONCLUTION

The package was designed in such a way that future modifications can be done easily. The following conclusions can be deduced from the development of the project:

- Automation of the entire system improves the efficiency
- It provides a friendly graphical user interface which proves to be better when compared to the existing system.
- It gives appropriate access to the authorized users depending on their permissions.
- It effectively overcomes the delay in communications.
- Updating of information becomes so easier
- System security, data security and reliability are the striking features.
- The System has adequate scope for modification in future if it is necessary.
